The healthcare industry has been bombarded with concurrent cyber threats over the last 12 months as they are on the front lines of the COVID response. Caregivers have faced many challenges during this period, including workforce shortages, overcrowded facilities, and the lack of personal protective equipment (PPE) to name a few. Ransomware however, poses the greatest cyber security threat facing the healthcare industry and caused several directly related deaths during this pandemic.

In a report released by the CTI League earlier today, many points of interest have been covered in detail. In this article, we'll cover some of the key insights and you can read the full report below.

What is the CTI League?

The CTI League is a collective of cyber security professionals who work together with law enforcement organizations to identify and collect CTI (Cyber Threat Intelligence) to prevent ransomware from gaining access. Within the CTI League, there's an entire team of security researchers who monitor cybercriminal underground networks within the Darknet and Deep/Dark web, called CTIL-Dark. CTIL-Dark's goal is to reduce the likelihood and impact of cyber threats so these organizations can continue to provide care to the public consistently.

CTIL-Dark Insights and Assessments

CTIL Dark found that the top five ransomware variants that impacted healthcare in 2020 were Maze, Conti, Netwalker, REvil, and Ryuk. In total so far, attacks from these groups have affected more than 100 organizations.

Nearly two-thirds of healthcare cybercrime victims were in North America and Europe, with victims in every populated continent. They also found that the proliferation of dark markets and supply chains significantly lowered the barrier to entry for cybercriminals to affect healthcare.

Threat actors that deploy ransomware as part of their attack method will almost certainly increasingly target the healthcare industry as they are most vulnerable during the pandemic.

Threat groups will continue to leverage underground message boards and other Chan forums as a way to test out different COVID-themed conspiracies before launching their surface web disinformation campaigns.
